When the opener concerns a sex change, and features a sultry-voiced femme noting that 'you'd love to have a little something to play with', eyebrows will be raised. Brian Viglione, sticksman for The Dresden Dolls, has a great time playing with his (kit, that is). His angular and primal technique lays solid ground over which pianist Amanda Palmer proffers her nutsy keywork and spiteful, sexy vocals. Viglione is a powerhouse of eclectic technique. One to watch.
